

Table of Contents

Chapter 1 Introduction: the formation of preferences	4
1.1 The formation of social and individual preferences	4
1.2 Definition of, and special features of bequests	6
1.2.1 Definition of bequests	7
1.2.2 Bequests and inter-vivos transfers	9
1.2.3 Individualistic and unitary approach to bequest behavior	9
1.3 Planned bequests as an intergenerational transmission of preferences	11
1.3.1 Definition of planned bequests	11
1.3.2 Receiving planned bequests from parents	12
1.3.3 Revealing planned bequests to children	13
Chapter 2 Why do people bequeath?	17
2.1 Reasons for bequeathing	17
2.1.1 Nature	18
2.1.1.1 Altruism	18
2.1.1.2 Strategic considerations	19
2.1.2 Culture	20
2.1.2.1 Reciprocity	21
2.1.2.2 Wealth	22
2.1.2.3 Reputation	22
2.1.2.4 Replication effect	23
2.1.2.5 Other reasons	24
2.1.3 Accidental bequests	24
2.1.4 Why do people want to bequeath?	25
2.2 When and how to tell that bequests are not accidental: the making of a will	26
2.3 Some stylized facts of wills	27
2.3.1 Evidence from a district court in Poland	32
2.3.2 Evidence from SHARE and HRS	34
Chapter 3 The family tradition approach to bequest behavior	38
3.1 Tradition in economics, and the role of the family in preserving and transmitting tradition	38

3.2	The role of inheritances in the shaping of preferences: how a tradition is set	45
3.3	Applicability of the family tradition approach to bequest behavior	47
Chapter 4 Towards a model of bequest behavior: the role of inheritances		51
4.1	A family tradition model of bequests	51
4.2	The “standard” bequests model	52
4.3	Testable propositions	52
Chapter 5 Empirical analysis		60
5.1	The data and sample selection	60
5.1.1	Sample size	60
5.1.2	Heirs and non-heirs	61
5.1.3	Selection into groups of heirs and non-heirs	64
5.2	The econometric procedure	69
5.3	Descriptive statistics	74
5.3.1	Planned bequests	75
5.3.2	Inheritances and other components of wealth	77
5.3.3	Characteristics of the respondents and their children	84
5.4	Econometric results	88
5.4.1	Introductory insights regarding the impact of the experience of inheriting on bequest behavior	92
5.4.2	The impact of the experience of inheriting estimated using multiple imputations	96
5.4.3	Extensions of the main econometric estimations	101
5.4.4	Summary	103
5.5	Discussion of the econometric results and final remarks	104
5.5.1	Discussion of the econometric results	104
5.5.2	Altruism and family tradition to bequeath	106
5.5.3	Policy implications and other remarks	109
Chapter 6 Brief conclusions, and several ideas for future research		111
References		114
Appendix		128